

RELATED ORGANIZATIONS

Related organizations generally have been established by Friends beyond the organizational structure of Yearly Meetings to speak to special concerns. Most prominent of these are Quaker educational institutions and service organizations.

These organizations relate to a wide variety of concerns and needs and obviously cannot reflect the emphasis of each individual Friend. It is, however, incumbent upon all Friends to be sensitive to avenues of service that have been opened under deep spiritual concern. The organizations described on the next pages are such avenues and are commended for your study and support.

Note that these related organizations determine their own policies, goals and organizational structure.

Statement of Purpose

Encourage and strengthen the spiritual life within the Society of Friends through such measures as the promotion of inter-visitation, study, conferences and a wide sharing of experience on the deepest spiritual level.

Help Friends gain a better understanding of the worldwide character of the Society of Friends and its vocation in the world today.

Promote consultation among Friends of all cultures, countries and languages.

Seek to bring the different groups of Friends into intimate touch with one another on the basis of their common Quaker heritage, with a view to sharing experience and coming to some measure of agreement in regard to their attitude toward modern world problems.

Promote understanding among Friends of all counties and members of other branches of the Christian Church and with members of other religious faiths, and interpret the specific Quaker message to those who seek further religious experience.

Keep under review the Quaker contribution in world affairs and facilitate both the examination and presentation of Quaker thinking and concern.

Specific Areas of Concern

1. Consultation between Missions and Service - Building acquaintance and confidence, staff visits are aimed at improving relations between various Quaker agencies. Establishment of a list of openings for Quaker Service is another proposal which would serve this purpose, helping to break down boundaries in Quaker work; steps are constantly being taken toward trans-national ways of working at Quaker tasks.
2. Isolated Friends - Many Friends in non-Quaker work outside their own countries want to make effective Quaker witness. FWCC correspondence and arranging of visits provide information and inspiration.

Statement of Purpose

Since 1966 William Penn House, located on East Capital Street, Washington, DC, has made a Quaker witness for peace by offering seminars, sponsoring internships, and providing simple accommodations for travelers.

Specific Areas of Work and Concern

Seminars - William Penn House offers seminars to groups (schools, Meetings, churches or other organizations), a well-rounded program on current issues with leaders and experts who deal daily with matters affecting us all. The seminars give up-to-date information on issues facing our nation and the world.

Internship - A William Penn House internship enables individuals to spend a year in Washington working for a Friends' organization and taking advantage of cultural and educational opportunities found in the nation's capital. College graduates sympathetic to Friends' testimonies and who have an interest in peace may apply.

Statement of Purpose

Provide sound and challenging educational programs leading to the B. A. and B. S. degrees in the context of Quaker values and concerns.

“As a Quaker college, Guilford is fundamentally committed to nurturing a large range of human qualities in addition to those involved in intellectual activities; this fertile link between education and human service underlies all that we attempt to do. Quakerism is a way of life and thought, securely rooted in the Christian tradition. Quakers have traditionally emphasized simplicity of life, regard for the individual, social responsibility, peace and active social concern. Quakerism is also a mode of inquiry, a search for truth by the individual sustained by a sense of corporate guidance based on free and open discussion. From its founding Guilford College has attempted to keep faith with these basic principles. Its purpose has been to develop men and women of humane inclinations and of disciplined and creative minds for lives of leadership, service and self-fulfillment and spiritual growth.”
